I'm trying to reduce waste in my routine. Can you recommend a brand that ships plastic-free and doesn't test on animals?

Based on the information provided, none of the companies explicitly mention shipping plastic-free. However, I can highlight brands that align with your values regarding animal testing and sustainability:

1. Garnier: Cruelty-free (Leaping Bunny-certified) and 99% vegan ingredients. They focus on reducing packaging waste through innovations like shampoo bars.
2. Bielenda Professional: Cruelty-free, with a strong commitment to environmental initiatives, including sustainable packaging.
3. Q+A: Cruelty-free, with 100% recyclable packaging and a focus on minimizing environmental impact.
4. Essence: Cruelty-free, with vegan formulations, sustainable packaging, and efforts to reduce waste.

While none explicitly mention plastic-free shipping, these brands align closely with your values regarding animal testing and sustainability. If you're looking for more specific information about shipping practices, I recommend checking the brand websites directly or contacting their customer service for details.

Does Garnier have refillable products or ones available in glass jars?

Based on the provided information about Garnier's products, there is no mention of refillable products or items available in glass jars. The details focus primarily on product formulations, ingredients, and benefits rather than specific packaging options beyond the typical containers described.
