I just want something good for dry skin, I don't care where it's from.

Based on your preference for products for dry skin and no specific requirements regarding origin or other criteria (since they are marked as "not mentioned"), here are some options from the information provided:

- 1. Vichy Nutrilogie 2
 - A day cream for very dry skin, rich in sphingolipids, shea butter, and Vichy thermal water. It hydrates, calms, and regenerates dry skin while providing up to 48 hours of comfort.
- 2. Weleda Skin Food Light
 - A light moisturizing cream for dry skin that absorbs quickly and soothes with calendula, camomile, and viola tricolor extracts. It leaves the skin soft and smooth without an oily residue.
- 3. Bioderma Atoderm Nutritive
 - A day and night cream for dry and sensitive skin, enriched with shea butter and avocado oil to moisturize, soothe, and protect the skin.
- 4. Dermedic Hydrain3 Hialuro
 - A hydrating face serum for dry and very dry skin, containing hyaluronic acid, thermal water, and almond oil to restore hydration balance and leave the skin firm and smooth.

All of these products are designed to address dry skin concerns, so you can choose based on your personal preferences or specific skin needs.

Oh and I'd prefer if they didn't do animal testing.

Based on your preference for brands that do not conduct animal testing, here are three companies that align with your values:

- 1. SKIN1004: This brand is cruelty-free and vegan, offering products like the Centella Asiatica series which can be beneficial for dry skin due to their hydrating properties.
- 2. Beauty of Joseon: While not 100% vegan, they have several vegan-friendly options available, such as the Relief Sun sunscreen and Glow Deep Serum. Their traditional hanbang-inspired products are gentle and suitable for hydration needs.
- 3. Revolution Skincare: This brand is cruelty-free with a 76% vegan product lineup. They offer gentle and hydrating skincare solutions that can help address dryness effectively.

All these brands avoid animal testing and provide options that cater to dry skin care, ensuring both ethical practices and effective results.

What kind of ingredients are in SKIN1004's products?
