I'm looking for a skincare brand from Asia that doesn't test on animals.

To find an Asian skincare brand that doesn't test on animals, consider the following organized approach:

- Korean Brands:
 - The Face Shop: Known for being cruelty-free and widely available. Check their compliance with EU regulations for additional assurance.
 - Innisfree: Eco-friendly and ethical, likely a good fit. Verify through official channels.
 - Etude House: Some products are cruelty-free; confirm with the brand.
- Japanese Brands:
 - Look into indie or niche brands rather than major ones like Shiseido or SK-II for better cruelty-free options.
- Taiwanese Brands:
 - My Beauty Diary: Check their official website for animal testing policies.
 - Consider exploring local markets or online platforms for smaller, more transparent brands.
- Chinese Brands:
 - Perfect Diary and The Ordinary (Asian branch): Investigate their cruelty-free status, considering recent regulatory changes in China.
- Indie and Niche Brands:
 - Explore Etsy or local markets for smaller, possibly more ethical options.
- Certifications:
 - Look for the Leaping Bunny logo, an international standard for cruelty-free products.
 - Refer to PETA's list of recommended brands.
- Transparency and Ingredients:
 - Ensure that both the brand and their suppliers do not test on animals, as some may use third-party tested ingredients.
- Availability:
 - Check if the brand ships internationally or has distribution in your region for easier access.
- Research:
 - Consult customer reviews and forums for recent information and trustworthiness of brands.

By systematically exploring these avenues, you can identify a suitable Asian skincare brand that aligns with your values regarding animal testing.

What are their most popular cleansers?

Here are some of the most popular cleansers from the Asian skincare brands mentioned earlier, known for being cruelty-free and widely praised for their effectiveness:

1. The Face Shop

- Best Seller Honey Cleansing Foam
 - A gentle, hydrating cleanser with honey extract that removes dirt, makeup, and impurities without stripping moisture.
 - Ideal for sensitive or dry skin types.

2. Innisfree

- Green Tea Cleansing Stick
 - A popular cleansing stick infused with green tea extract to gently cleanse and refresh the skin.
 - Great for oily or acne-prone skin as it helps control excess oil while keeping the skin balanced.

3. Etude House

- Moistfull Hydrating Cream Cleanser
 - A rich, creamy cleanser that melts into the skin to remove makeup and impurities gently.
 - Formulated for dry or dehydrated skin types, it leaves the skin feeling soft and hydrated.

4. Japanese Brands (Indie/Niche)

While major Japanese brands like Shiseido or SK-II are not typically cruelty-free, you can explore smaller indie brands that focus on ethical practices:

- Amaterasu Cosmetics
 - Known for natural and gentle skincare products. Look for their cleansing balms or milks.
 - Sana Cosmetics (if cruelty-free verified)
 - Offers hydrating cleansers suitable for sensitive skin.

5. My Beauty Diary (Taiwan)

- Milky Cleansing Foam
 - A gentle, foaming cleanser that effectively removes dirt and makeup without irritation.
 - Perfect for sensitive or dry skin types due to its mild formula.

6. Perfect Diary (China)

- Clean Start Gel Cleanser
 - A lightweight gel cleanser that gently removes impurities and excess oil without disrupting the skin's natural moisture barrier.

- Ideal for oily or combination skin types.

Tips for Choosing a Cleanser:

- Consider your skin type (e.g., oily, dry, sensitive).
- Look for certifications like the Leaping Bunny logo to ensure cruelty-free standards.
- Check reviews to confirm how the cleanser performs on different skin types.

These cleansers are some of the most popular and well-regarded in their respective brands. Let me know if you'd like more recommendations!

Do any of those contain green tea extract?

Based on your request for an Asian skincare brand that doesn't test on animals and includes green tea extract in their cleansers, here is a concise summary:

1. Innisfree:
 - Product: Green Tea Cleansing Stick
 - Details: This cleanser contains green tea extract, which is beneficial for its antioxidant properties, helping to reduce inflammation and control oil. It's ideal for oily or acne-prone skin.
 - Cruelty-Free Status: Innisfree is known for being cruelty-free.
2. Other Brands Considered:
 - The Face Shop, Etude House, My Beauty Diary, and Perfect Diary were reviewed, but none of their cleansers listed contain green tea extract.
3. Considerations:
 - Green tea extract is particularly effective for oily or acne-prone skin due to its ability to control oil and reduce inflammation.
 - Look for certifications like the Leaping Bunny logo to ensure products are cruelty-free.
4. Alternative Options:
 - If Innisfree is not available in your region, consider exploring smaller indie brands from Asia that may offer cruelty-free products with green tea extract.

In conclusion, Innisfree's Green Tea Cleansing Stick stands out as a top recommendation meeting all your criteria: it is from an Asian skincare brand, doesn't test on animals, and contains beneficial green tea extract.
